"Coleção de Biografias Heroínas Negras do Brasil: 20 cordéis" is a collection of biographical narratives of black women in Brazil who fought for their rights throughout history. These pamphlets were written by 26-year-old Jardi Arraes, who was motivated by the fact that black women are often left out of the country's history, even though they played an integral part in its formation. She said finding details about the lives of these women was an arduous task, as there were few historical records about them, and the number of reliable sources was also scarce. Featured women include: Luisa Mahin, Laudelina de Campos, Maria Aranha, Maria Felipa, Acotirene, Anastácia, Antonieta de Barros, Aqualtune, Carolina María de Jesus, Dandara dos Palmares, Esperanca Garcia, Eva Maria do Bonsucceso, Maria Firmina dos Reis, Maria Crioula, Na Agontimé, Tereza de Benguela, Tia Ciata, Tia Simoa, Zacimba Gaba and Zeferina.

Historically, women have been under-represented in politics. Patriarchal political parties, debilitating customs and discriminatory selection processes, and obstructionist attitudes have generally contributed to the inability of women to enter mainstream political life in a significant way. In Women in Caribbean Politics Cynthia Barrow-Giles and her co-contributors profile 20 of the most influential women in modern Caribbean politics who have struggled and excelled, in spite of the obstacles. Divided into four parts, this volume looks at women who led the struggle for freedom; those who agitated for equal rights and justice in the pre-independence period; postcolonial trailblazers; as well as a group which Cynthia Barrow-Giles refers to as Women CEOs. The profiles cover women from 12 territories, with varying political, ethnic and socio-economic issues. Anyone with an interest in Caribbean Politics or Gender Studies will find Women in Caribbean Politics to be an excellent introduction. For students and teachers, it will be a valuable resource, as it highlights some of the little-known stories of Caribbean women who have set the foundation for, and continue to help to shape the identity of their nations and the region on a whole.

In this collection, the uncertain paths of childhood and adulthood are traced through a sequence of poems that treat Idlewild—a place deep in the heart of rural Jamaica—as a character, a constant that serves as a reliable touchstone for memory. Although the majority of the poems are centered on themes of security and pleasant memory, the edges are haunted with truths of rupture in family relations, abandonment, loneliness, resentment of unreliable men, and the challenges of maintaining faith through difficult times. Balancing nostalgia for the past with an acute awareness of the present—the poverty, violence, class divides, and racial complexities of modern day Jamaica—the central voice of the poem matures along with the subject matter to gradually unveil a well-formed poetic voice with an authoritative command of form and language.

Gregg's selections are guided by a search for answers to the questions: What have West Indian women contributed to the creation of Anglophone Caribbean society, politics, cultures, and intellectual traditions? How is Caribbean womanhood defined and articulated? Beginning with the writings of generations of women born after slavery ended, the anthology builds on existing bodies of knowledge and forms of inquiry into Caribbean women's lives through its presentation of some of their many important contributions to the creation and development of Caribbean intellectual history. The volume is divided into two sections that are broadly shaped by major historical flashpoints: the postemancipation and decolonization struggles (1890–1945), and the postwar period marked by a movement toward nation building, constitutional independence, and cultural nationalism (1945–1980). The volume begins with some of the (so far) earliest known writing by native born West Indian women on political and social issues and ends at the point where sustained Caribbean feminist scholarship begins. Writings in the first section are drawn primarily from newspapers, pamphlets, and occasional publications. They address key issues such as voting rights, political equality, colonialism, race, work, and social welfare. The second section includes the work of some of the women who were part of the first and second generations of professional academic women at the University of the West Indies, established in 1948. Their selections challenge many of the prevailing intellectual models used to define Caribbean societies and identities.

Mujeres bajo sospecha es un estudio sobre las sexualidades disidentes bajo el franquismo, con un especial énfasis en las relaciones entre mujeres desde una perspectiva de género. Pese a la dificultad de investigar un tema sobre el que ha primado una política de negación radical, se ha conseguido sistematizar y reunir un amplio número de investigaciones dispersas que habitualmente apenas resultan visibles más allá de un estrecho círculo. Las investigaciones se han centrado, principalmente, en dos aspectos. Por un lado, el análisis de la vida y del discurso de mujeres que amaron a otras mujeres y que vivieron durante el franquismo; por otro, las formas del control social de la sexualidad en este periodo, habida cuenta de que las sexualidades no normativizadas no pueden estudiarse sin el contexto en el que han sido moldeadas, reprimidas o construidas. En definitiva, este libro, destinado a personas interesadas en la historia reciente de España y en los estudios de género, es el eslabón final de un trabajo colectivo que ha logrado cubrir el vacío existente hasta el momento en un campo que combina la sexualidad y la memoria histórica.

En muchas ocasiones, la historia oficial ha hablado, y sin duda hablará, del exilio republicano de 1939. En muy pocas, sin embargo, se ha estudiado el importantísimo papel de la mujer en la diáspora provocada por el final de la Guerra Civil española. El exilio violeta de Marta Pessarrodona, Premio Nacional de Literatura catalana 1911, nos relata precisamente una parte de este exilio, ya exterior ya interior, tan poco difundido: el de las mujeres intelectuales catalanas, que en soledad o con sus familiares, tuvieron que marchar a otras tierras u ocultarse y autoexcluirse de la sociedad por temor a la represalia y, en la mayoría de los casos, con la esperanza y el alma rotas. Marta Pessarrodona, escritora con larga trayectoria en lengua catalana, se define como poetisa. Ha cultivado el ensayo y la narración corta y a traducido a autoras tan emblemáticas como Doris Lessing, Virginia Woolf o Susan Sontag. Este año ha recibido el Premio Nacional de Literatura Catalana.

A cien años de su nacimiento, la mujer que fue considerada ícono del feminismo y abogada de la causa de las mujeres sigue provocando controversias y emociones. Simone de Beauvoir atravesó casi toda la historia del siglo XX. Profesora, filósofa existencialista, compañera de Sartre, amante de muchos otros, escritora prolífica, feminista comprometida y guía de numerosas mujeres en su combate, Beauvoir marcó los espíritus, tanto por la vida que llevó y narró como por la obra que dejó. En sus múltiples facetas, Beauvoir logró suscitar en su lectorado un alto grado de proximidad –afectiva, reflexiva, política, ideológica– que no se separa de cierta toma de distancia. A la hora de rendirle homenaje, en este principio del siglo XXI, nos preguntamos, por un lado, qué sentido guarda Beauvoir en nuestros trabajos académicos, relativos al género y a otros prismas de análisis de la sociedad actual y, por el otro, qué sentimientos puede seguir despertando su vida y su obra mezcladas, tanto en personas que vivieron la época de Beauvoir, como en generaciones nuevas que la descubrieron mucho más tarde...
